

A multiplication block for a reconfigurable chip includes multiple multiplication units and a group of the selectable adder units operably interconnectable with the multiplication units. The adder units can be selectively connected for different configurations. The multiplication block is preferably controlled by an instruction which can put the multiplication block into different configurations.